In the beginning of the extract, Shelley presents Victor as having an idyllic childhood and being focused on his education. When describing his relationship with Elizabeth, Victor states "harming was the soul of our companionships". Shelley uses a metaphor to create a comparison between harmony and their friendship, emphasising the closeness of their relationship. The abstract noun 'harmony' connotes perfection, peace and heavenly joy. This implies that there are no disputes or disagreements in Victor's family. Shelley also describes Victor's 'thirst for knowledge', using a metaphor to align learning with need. This indicates that Victor needs education in order to survive. Shelley uses this language to emphasise the perfect nature of Victor's upbringing whilst introducing his obsession with learning.

Model:

Shelley uses the character of the monster to explore ambition. At the beginning of his narrative, the monster longs to be a part of society, which is particularly influenced by his watching of the DeLacey family. He sees their kindness and compassion towards each other and admits, "I longed to join them". The monster is ostracised due to his inability to communicate, leading to his desire to learn language: "I ardently desired to understand them". When Safie arrives, the monster relishes the opportunity to learn, with the hope that eloquence will help him to overcome the prejudice he faces due to his appearance. Upon learning language, the monster begins to understand society and prejudice in greater depth and questions: "Was I then a monster, a blot upon the earth?" Whilst the monster is able to achieve his ambition of communication, he soon realises that he will never be able to achieve his desires to integrate into society as a result of prejudice. His belief is solidified when Felix tears him away from his father with 'supernatural force' and realises that, despite humans showing kindness for each other, he will never be a recipient of the same care or compassion. Shelley uses the character of the monster to highlight the destructive impact of prejudice within society.
